

THIS WAY FOR THE WINTER GARDEN REVIEW

LILLIAN LORRAINE IN "THE PASSING SHOW OF 1916" at the WINTER GARDEN.

It is easy enough to understand why Mr. Ziegfeld's annual entertainment at the New Amsterdam Theatre—perhaps it is best to say downstairs in order to distinguish it from the entertainment fathered by the same gentleman which goes on apparently without cessation from month to month on the roof—should have become every year a great feast to the eye and less and less a comic travesty of current events. Beauty in any of the forms in which it appears triumphant in the Follies is more easily available than wit.

For all the qualities that go to make up the aesthetic charm of these beautiful productions may be acquired by the expenditure of money. There are plenty of Urbans at hand, silks and satins are to be had by the yard or the acre, and the human body, whether it is to be exploited in a sweatshop or glorified as a thing of beauty on the stage, is the cheapest commodity in the world.

But the originality and genius that reside in the noodle, say, of George M. Cohan cannot be duplicated the world over. The fun and the sophistication that he is able to impart to a musical show are things that are not to be found anywhere else and cannot be purchased by any manager in the world. There used to be the objection to some of Mr. Cohan's humor that it was of the stage-study. But the public has shown in its loyalty to his latest review that nothing evidently interests and amuses it so much as theatre fun. So Mr. Cohan remains unique in his ability to supply the wittiest of these popular travesties, both in the matter of dialogue and in the arrangement of the scenes.

That large part of the community which gratefully accepts its amusement from Mr. Ziegfeld and would be bereft of summer joy without his ministrations need not worry. The Follies of this year of grace will not fall in their power to amuse a whit below the standard of their predecessors once they are in the form they should be. There is plenty of talent among the women comedians. Bert Williams will be more mellow and authoritative in his fun after a while. It is idle to deny that Leon Errol is missed. Fanny Brice's imitation of Anna Pavlova is inimitable, and all the Ballet Russe burlesque is most diverting. Ina Claire is clever in her imitations, which were always the best thing she could do besides look mildly decorative. So there are with Bernard Granville and Carl Randall, a remarkably skilful interpreter of the so-called "modern dances," enough

HERE IS DRAMA.

"Justice" will be seen but for two weeks more at the Candler Theatre. It is typical modern tragedy in the sordid and colorless mood of Galsworthy, leading nowhere and ending on an unresolved chord. The play is acted with an unusual approach to perfection and should not be missed. "The Cinderella Man" is a modern fairy tale which shows how fond the public is of the play which not only tells a story but tells the kind of a story in the way it likes. The piece has crowded the Hudson Theatre for twenty-three weeks.

"A Lady's Name" is farce of a high and brisk order to which Marie Tempest adds the distinction of the rarest kind of a witty and uncommon drama of the Washington Square Players, who are finding great success in their new home.

comedians to keep the Follies popular for the next six months. And that ought to satisfy not only Mr. Ziegfeld but the public.

No costumes of previous years have been lovelier in design and color than those worn by the women in this summer's edition of a popular piece. Joseph Urban again combines his Viennese secessionist art with any period of history, however inappropriate it may be. Even in the Capulet household the columns within the balcony must have their inevitable conventional ornamentation. Mr. Urban's work is always so strongly suggestive not only of art nouveau, which might be enough in itself, but of German art nouveau that its appearance in an Italian palace of the Middle Ages seems even less appropriate than in scenes of Elizabethan England. But this is Mr. Urban's day, and perhaps it is not important to be the single voice in the wilderness when there is such acclaim from many quarters of all that he does. It must be said in his behalf that his contributions to musical plays are much easier to regard with patience than his adornments of the spoken drama.

In the present crowded and unsettled condition of the cinema theatres it seems possible to detect some tendencies which may result in a reasonable adjustment of the relation between the two forms of entertainment. It is evident that the small comedy or melodrama produced in the studio has long ago passed from the first class of moving picture plays. It is the 5 and 10 cent theatre which alone dares to offer these nowadays. In this particular field the spoken drama is still able to hold its own. There is no terror of the competition of the cinema here.

It is on something like the expan-

Why S. R. O. Sign Is Seldom Out for Shakespeare Plays

Louis Calvert, who is an experienced actor in the plays of Shakespeare, has just been telling some of the thoughts which the works of the great bard awaken in the mind of one who has interpreted them so frequently. He recently made the following observations at the meeting of the representatives of the Shakespeare clubs of this city. He said:

"There is an impression that the public do not generally care for Shakespeare. My own impression is that they who see most of his works that are earnestly and reverently presented simply adore them, but the great bulk of the public seem to stay away. There are probably many reasons for this. Many, I believe, have never even seen him played, having heard that his plays are dull, and do not trouble to ascertain for themselves. In my opinion he is a great entertainer. Another reason may be that when they do see him he has been so out of distorted that there is very little of his original play left. More often than not they see him presented by a star who, being assured (as a favorite actor with the public) of a certain amount of support, is anxious to be seen in some such role as Hamlet, Romeo, Macbeth, or if the star is of the feminine gender such parts as Juliet, Rosalind, Portia, etc., who use the play as a vehicle to display their own particular talents and firmly believe that the public are not interested in the rest of the act and they, he public, leave the theatre after the performance, saying that their hero or heroine in the case may be was fine—but the play was poor, and probably and I don't care much for Shakespeare."

"Another reason may be that it is a general rule to overburden the play

sive scale of "The Fall of a Nation" or "Civilization" that the moving picture has a problem to which the theatre does not aspire. The views of vast and remote landscapes, the representation of the cataclysms of nature, struggles of physical forces and the reproduction of any phase of nature on a scale which the stage cannot attempt—it is in these particulars that the films possess a field all their own. It is not probable that the number of these pictures will be so great as to imperil the prosperity of the drama. Indeed, there has been less opposition than usual this year to the arrival from the cinema theatre. Its rivals have been decreased by the disappearance of all but the most elaborate and the most beautiful of the moving picture pieces. So the theatre now feels less than it did a few years ago the competition of the camera. It is only in its most triumphant manifestations that the cinema may be regarded as a rival of the spoken drama.

With such an excess of scenery often very beautiful to the detriment of the drama, I myself have known many cases when in timing a play at a dress rehearsal the manager has found that the final curtain cannot possibly roll down till after midnight and proceeds not to eliminate or simplify his heavy scenery but to cut out whole scenes of the play. Scenery represents money, and so has the respect of the manager, but he gets his Shakespeare for nothing, and being so lightly got is lightly treated. Injudicious cutting is a fatal error. Take, for instance, the tragedy of Romeo and Juliet. After the deaths of Mercutio and Tybal there is a scene in which Capulet and Montague with their wives and the Prince take part in which the Prince pronounces the decree of banishment on the absent Romeo. It is of great dramatic value and must be restored. Also another scene frequently left out, in which the audience learns the reason why Romeo does not receive the Prince's letter. This is most important—and then again at the end of the play the reconciliation of Capulet and Montague over the dead bodies of the Dolly Sisters may be the best dancers on the New Amsterdam Roof in the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, but they do not do all of it. They have to make way for the others occasionally, and the public does get a chance to take a few steps. Will Rogers, William Rock and Frances White and the Annet Brothers are still on the list of entertainers. At the Montmartre at Mid-night there is excellent music. There is also dancing by Albert and Samaya, and every other condition suited to the enjoyment of the most exacting cabaret frequenters.

WHERE TO DANCE.

The Dolly Sisters may be the best dancers on the New Amsterdam Roof in the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, but they do not do all of it. Romeo and Juliet, in which Shakespeare shows that wonderful optimism which pervades all his great tragedies. Romeo and Juliet have not died in vain. Their sacrifices have brought lasting peace. Now as the stars who play Romeo and Juliet have nothing to say in these scenes they eliminate them. When you have time read the Prince's beautiful and human speech at the end of the play and then you will realize what a sacrifice it is to cut it out.

"I could enumerate scores of these indiscriminate cuttings so fatal to the success of the plays as a whole if the time permitted. Surely Shakespeare should be played for his own sake, simply and reverently, and the cutting should be done by a loving hand and as sparingly as possible—and that only in lengthy speeches. There are very few scenes in Shakespeare that need to be eliminated altogether. And the adjunct of scenery should be very carefully considered. It should only be used as an accessory, just enough to help the imagination of the audience and never to distract from the acting, as is often the case. The scenic artist too often desires to make his work so striking as to gain the attention of the audience, whereas it is essential to the play that the actors' faces should be the high light of the picture. For example, place a strong electric light on the stage, and the eye unconsciously turns to it. So it is with a very bright sky, or a change of morning to night on the back cloth. While the actors are developing some important portion of the play the audience are watching the changes of light and missing the play.

"Some people say that Shakespeare deplored the lack of scenery and quote the speeches of Chorus in Henry V. To prove their case well, to me Shakespeare does the very opposite. He says, 'Can this cockpit hold the vasty fields of France?' or may we cram into this wooden O the very casques that did affright the air at Agincourt? Well, if you had the wealth of a Rockefeller you couldn't do it, and even if they were possible there would be no longer a play but a pageant. No, he in the voice of Chorus asks his audiences to help the dramatist with their imagination. As thus:

O for a muse of fire, that might ascend to the highest heaven, that might descend to the bottom of the deep, that might do all that the heart of man could wish, that might do all that the eye of man could see, that might do all that the ear of man could hear, that might do all that the tongue of man could say, that might do all that the hand of man could do, that might do all that the foot of man
